News / Business aviation, Manufacturer

Airbus Helicopters is launching a drive to offer 240 new apprenticeship positions at its headquarters in Marignane, France as well as other regional offices. The positions are in various fields and for all educational levels.

The chosen apprentices will study the production lines at close quarters and the initiative will include courses from of between one and three years. The apprenticeship programme will include posts for mechanics, technicians, designers, customer support, finance, purchasing, logistics, human resources and communications staff.

Airbus Helicopters will start the campaign at the end of April, with applications being processed online. However, Airbus has insisted that all candidates must already be involved in a training project – already approved or currently being approved – in an educational or training establishment.
