Air France has announced the first additions to its Summer 2027 schedule, strengthening its North American network with the launch of new nonstop services to Nashville, Tennessee, and San Diego, California. Both routes will be operated from Paris-Charles de Gaulle using Airbus A350-900 aircraft, with three weekly flights each.

The new San Diego service will commence on 3 May 2027, with flights operating every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. The Southern California destination will become Air France's latest gateway on the U.S. West Coast, further expanding the airline's footprint in one of the country's most dynamic travel markets.

Just days later, on 14 May 2027, Air France will inaugurate flights to Nashville, offering three weekly services from Paris on the same operating days. In a tribute to country music icon Dolly Parton, whose legacy is closely linked to the Tennessee capital, the route will carry flight number AF046, referencing the singer's birth year, 1946.

With the launch of these services, Air France will become the only airline offering nonstop flights between Paris and both Nashville and San Diego. The Nashville route will also make Air France the sole carrier connecting continental Europe directly with Tennessee's capital, further enhancing travel options between Europe and the United States.
