EVA Air will begin a new nonstop service from Taipei to Delhi on December 1, with bookings now open on EVA Air's website or travel agencies. Operating five flights per week with Airbus A330-300 aircraft, the new route will make EVA Air the only Taiwan-based airline offering nonstop passenger flights to India. Through EVA Air's partnership with Star Alliance member Air India, passengers can conveniently connect beyond Delhi to major Indian cities, supporting growing demand from business travelers, students, researchers, and visiting friends and relatives. Delhi is not only India's political and commercial capital but also the gateway to the country's famous Golden Triangle, linking Delhi, Agra, and Jaipur.

EVA Air President Clay Sun commented: "The launch of nonstop Taipei?Delhi service represents an important milestone in EVA Air's network development. Growing connections across the manufacturing, semiconductor, artificial intelligence, and technology industries continue to drive closer economic ties between Taiwan and India. Our new Delhi route not only provides a more efficient travel option for business and leisure passengers but also strengthens connectivity between India and North America through our Taipei hub."

North American travelers can also take advantage of EVA Air's extensive Asian network, with convenient connections via Taiwan to major cities across Asia. By linking Asia and the Americas through a highly efficient hub and delivering award-winning five-star service, EVA Air continues to provide a premium and reliable travel experience for passengers worldwide.
