

AIRBUS' HISTORIC SALE TO IRAN COULD BE IN TROUBLE

News / Manufacturer

In January, Airbus and Iran Air agreed to a landmark deal for 118 aircraft with a total value rising to as much as $25 billion.

One of the most significant parts of the deal is an agreement for 12 A380 superjumbos worth upwards of $5.2 billion at list prices.

However, this portion of the deal may be in jeopardy according to Tim Hopher of Reuters.

Sources within Iran told the publication that the country's government is having second thoughts about the massive double-decker aircraft.

In fact, an Iranian government spokes person pointed out to Reuters that the A380 portion of the deal is an option that can be switched over to other aircraft models rather than a firm order.

As a result, Iran's non-committal attitude towards the A380 is troubling for the airplane.

Should the Iran Air order fall through, it would be a significant blow to the morale of the embattled program. Iran's 12 A380s represent the largest commitment from an airline for the aircraft since 2013.

Airbus and Iran Air were not immediately available for comment.

Although Airbus has taken 319 orders for the A380, the production backlog is at just 129 planes. As a result, Airbus announced earlier this year that it will slow down the production rate for the airplane to buy the sales team some more time to generate orders.

In January, Airbus CEO Fabrice Brégier called the deal a significant step in the modernization of Iran's commercial aviation sector.

Because of economic sanctions levied against Iran over the past few decades, the country's national airline has been unable to expand its service and update its fleet. As a result, Iran Air's fleet of nearly 50 airplanes has an average age of 27 years, according to Airfleets.net.

Aircraft as per agreement

28th January 2016

A320ceo Family

21

A320neo Family

24

A330ceo Family

27

A330neo (-900)

18

A350-1000

16

A380

12

© AIRBUS S.A.S. 31707 Blagnac Cedex, France, 2016. All rights reserved. Airbus, its logo and the product names are registered trademarks. Computer renderings by Fivon. Printed in France. Concept design by Airbus Multi Media Support 20160044.

SOURCE: BUSINESS INSIDER

ARTICLE LINK:

<https://50skyshades.com/index.php/news/manufacturer/airbus-historic-sale-to-iran-could-be-in-trouble>