

APPLY NOW: SHAPING THE FUTURE OF THE LUFTHANSA GROUP AS A GREEN MOBILITY TRAINEE

News / Airlines

Developing solutions for a more sustainable aviation and thus actively shaping the future of the Group: The Lufthansa Group offers this and much more with the "Green Mobility Trainee" program. From now until September 2, interested Master's degree graduates who have already dealt with the topic of sustainability during their studies or internships can apply via the homepage www.greenmobilitytrainee.de. The trainee program begins on February 1, 2024, and runs for 18 months. With this program, the Lufthansa Group underscores its commitment to a future-oriented and more sustainable aviation industry.

The trainees will each work on three sustainability projects in different companies of the Lufthansa Group. A broad and diverse spectrum enables the trainees to gain an understanding of the entire aviation industry: from passenger transportation to logistics and technology to IT. In addition to the individual challenges of the companies, the trainees learn about the different ways of working, approaches to solutions and corporate cultures. They dive deep into the latest research and engage in close exchange with technological pioneers of sustainable mobility. Training in the areas of pitching, storytelling and project management round off the program.

Trainees acquire the necessary tools to help shape solutions for a shift towards a greener industry. Participants of the first generation with a focus on sustainable logistics participated, among other things, in the development of a digital dashboard for the individual CO2 calculation of freight shipments.

"Pro Master Sustainability" student programme

Young talents who are still at the beginning of their master's studies with a focus on sustainability also have opportunities to shape the Lufthansa Group more sustainably through the student program "Pro Master Sustainability".
