Virgin Australia's new International Business Class was officially launched today at Los Angeles International Airport, representing a significant enhancement to the customer experience on the trans-Pacific route and an important investment in travel and tourism between Australia and the United States.

The airline's flagship Business Class product 'The Business' and a new Business Class Bar and Lounge is now flying daily between Sydney and Los Angeles. It will be installed on all Virgin Australia Boeing 777-300ER aircraft by September 2016, together with a new Premium cabin and a new Economy Space + product in the main cabin.

Virgin Australia Group CEO John Borghetti said: "I'm confident this is the best Business Class flying on the Pacific and that it will be the top choice for premium travellers

"Together with our partner Delta, we will become the only trans-Pacific alliance that can offer our Business Class guests lie flat beds with direct aisle access on all services between Australia and the United States.

“As the largest airline partner of Tourism Australia, we are passionate about promoting Australia to the United States and the world,” Mr Borghetti said.

In 2015 the United States was Australia’s fourth largest inbound market for visitor arrivals and the third largest market for total visitor spend, with the market predicted to be worth between $4.5 billion and $5.5 billion by 2020. There was a ten per cent increase in visitors from the United States arriving in Australia last year¹.

An interactive virtual tour of the new Business Class cabin, together with the refreshed Premium cabin, was also launched today on Google Street View.

tangerine Chief Creative Officer Matt Round said: “Great design creates outstanding customer experiences that transform business. This is what we have done for Virgin Australia and it’s shaking the market.”
