BPE AIR REPORTS NEARLY US$90 MILLION IN 2025 REVENUE AS ALDREW CROWE ADVANCES INTEGRATED AVIATION PLATFORM

News / Business aviation, Finance

BPE Air, the aviation company founded and wholly owned by entrepreneur Aldrew Crowe, reported approximately US$90 million in revenue in 2025, marking a major milestone in the growth of its integrated aviation platform. Founded in 2020, BPE Air has established operations across multiple segments of private and business aviation, including aircraft sales and acquisitions, leasing and leaseback solutions, charter services through established operating partners, aircraft management, and maintenance coordination. The company is also actively assessing aviation businesses and operational capabilities as potential strategic acquisition opportunities in both domestic and international markets.

partnerships, acquisition due diligence and corporate strategy. A graduate of Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University with a degree in Aviation Business Administration, he has built BPE Air on the belief that aircraft ownership, finance, maintenance, leasing and training are interconnected elements of a broader aviation ecosystem.

Rather than operating as a single-service aviation company, BPE Air is executing a vertically integrated growth strategy that combines operating activities, aircraft transactions, asset-backed opportunities and targeted acquisitions. The company is also investing in advanced flight simulation and professional aviation training capabilities, with infrastructure development and regulatory initiatives already forming part of its long-term expansion roadmap.

International operations are an increasingly important component of BPE Air's business model, supported by a growing network of aviation partners, suppliers, aircraft owners and service providers across multiple markets. At the same time, the company continues to evaluate strategic acquisition opportunities that could expand its operational footprint, enhance service offerings and create additional value throughout the aviation ecosystem.

Under Crowe's leadership, BPE Air's strategy is centered on building a scalable and diversified aviation platform. Rather than pursuing growth for growth's sake, the company focuses on acquiring and developing complementary capabilities that strengthen its competitive position, generate long-term enterprise value and support sustainable expansion across the aviation value chain.
